Chairman, President & CEO

Thank you, Will. Good morning, everyone, and thank you for joining us for today's call. I'll lead off with a few high-level remarks, and Dave will take you through our fourth quarter and full year results and provide an update to our 2020 outlook.

We announced the agreement to acquire Anixter International 2.5 weeks ago, and I'd like to provide you with a brief update on our recent activities. We remain very excited regarding the transformational combination of WESCO and Anixter, which will create a premier electrical and data communications distribution and supply chain services company. Our integration planning is well underway, and we are actively speaking with external partner candidates to provide integration advisory services and to help us achieve the sizable synergy opportunity that this combination presents. The required filings with the SEC as well as other regulatory approvals are in process. Anixter has not yet scheduled their shareholder vote to approve the agreement. However, we expect that will happen promptly once the required SEC filings are in place. And we remain on target to close this very exciting transaction in Q2 or Q3 of this year.

SG&A expenses were approximately 1% higher than the prior year after adjusting for costs associated with the Anixter acquisition. This increase was driven by the SLS acquisition. Excluding the SLS acquisition, SG&A expenses were down from the prior year due to a reduction in variable compensation expense, reflecting results below incentive targets for 2019.

Adjusted operating profit, excluding costs associated with the Anixter acquisition, was approximately $87 million in the quarter or 4.1% of sales, which was slightly below our implied outlook of approximately 4.2%.

We did not make any share repurchases during the fourth quarter. Between signing and closing of the Anixter merger, our capital allocation priority will be to invest in organic growth opportunities and repay debt. With the increase in debt expected to fund the Anixter merger, we expect leverage of about 4.5x pro forma EBITDA at closing and expect to return to our targeted range of 2 to 3.5x EBITDA within 24 months of closing the Anixter transaction.

Turning to our outlook for the full year. We expect this revenue growth to translate into operating margin of 4.1% to 4.4% and diluted earnings per share of $5.10 to $5.70, with an effective tax rate of approximately 22%. We continue to expect to generate free cash flow of at least 90% of net income. We expect an average share count of approximately 42 million shares for the year. This outlook does not include any impact from the Anixter acquisition. Additionally, the $100 million termination fee that we paid on behalf of Anixter and which was funded by a draw under our bank facilities will be treated as part of the purchase consideration and will, therefore, not have an impact on our income statement.

QUESTION AND ANSWER

Samuel John Darkatsh

Raymond James & Associates, Inc., Research Division

Two questions, if I could. First, Dave, last week, Standard & Poor's disclosed that it doesn't -- it's not going to be considering the 9.25 preferred as an equity instrument when determining their ratings, their debt ratings. How does this -- or does this affect your thoughts on the amount or the -- what constitutes the equity and/or debt issuance going forward? I think there's a fair amount of confusion or concern in terms of whether this actually means that there would be more of an equity dilution or an equity issuance because of it.

David S. Schulz

Senior VP & CFO

Yes, Sam. So that's obviously something that we're still working our way through. But as -- just to give you a little bit of the background on this, as we put together the offer consideration for the Anixter combination, we worked with our advisers to structure the preferred to receive equity treatment. And that was based on the guidelines that are established by both agencies that we're using. You may have seen that Moody's has issued a note saying that they expect to assign full equity credit to the preferred. S&P placed our rating on watch negative. And in their preliminary note, they expressed the need for more information. So we're going to continue to work with S&P to provide them with the information that they need and hopefully reach a -- the conclusion that we were planning for when we put together the consideration mix with the preferred.

As we think about it, right now, there's still a lot of situations that we're working our way through as it relates to this. So as soon as we have more details on that, we expect to inform the market, particularly when it comes to the capital structure to complete the acquisition. And again, right now, there's just a lot of moving pieces on that, but we're expecting, from an accounting treatment perspective, the preferred has not changed. We intend to recognize the preferred as equity. We're waiting to see how the rating agencies will also view that going forward.

Samuel John Darkatsh

Raymond James & Associates, Inc., Research Division

So to be clear, the 4.5x leverage that you expect considers the preferred as equity? That's the consideration?

David S. Schulz

Senior VP & CFO

That is correct.

Samuel John Darkatsh

Raymond James & Associates, Inc., Research Division

Okay. And then the last question I have, there's a fair amount of question as to potential accretion from the deal, especially year 3. There's obviously a huge range out there that we've seen from both the sell side and buy side. And any thoughts or quantification or range that you might be able to provide at this point?

David S. Schulz

Senior VP & CFO

We expect to provide an estimate of the accretion during the first quarter. So right now, we are still working through several factors that will inform and influence that accretion calculation. Obviously, the timing of the close, the amount of cash that's generated by both companies between signing and close and how that will impact the capital structure. And obviously, we're still doing quite a bit of evaluation work as it relates to the intangibles on the purchase price. So there's a lot of variables that we're still working our way through, but we fully expect that during the first quarter, we will be informing the market of our estimate of accretion, at least for year 3.

Operator

And the next question comes from Nigel Coe with Wolfe Research.

Cristian Jose Ramos

Wolfe Research, LLC

This is Cristian Ramos sitting in for Nigel. So I just wanted to touch back on Anixter. And we've been getting questions on whether or not the management team would consider issuing the equity a little sooner, just given the overhang that exists in the stock today. Any color or thoughts there?

David S. Schulz

Senior VP & CFO

Yes. Cristian, it's Dave Schulz. So again, we're still working our way through the capital structure decisions. I would tell you that we're clearly focused on ensuring that we get a Q2 or Q3 close of the deal. We're working through all the appropriate regulatory approvals that are required. We're working through the specifics on the capital structure. Again, I would tell you that it's not going to be influenced as much by our stock price as much as it's going to be influenced by the timing of those approvals and then when we can get out and begin raising the appropriate number of shares outstanding. So we're working on it.

Mario J. Cortellacci

Jefferies LLC, Research Division

This is Mario Cortellacci filling in for Hamzah. So a kind of question on the deal. So I believe one of the reasons why you wanted to do a transformational deal is to get better supplier concessions. And I think the largest supplier for you and Anixter are different. So I was just curious to know, I guess, how hard or how tough those negotiations tend to be. And how long do you think it'll take before you get better rebates?

John J. Engel

Chairman, President & CEO

So first, I think the construct of your question kind of centers around a point you're making on the rationale for the deal. That's not the rationale for the deal. So let me kind of take you back through that. I think it's incredibly important. I spoke at this at length at our Investor Day last year in June, so I encourage you to go back and go back through that. We spent -- we had a 4-plus-hour Investor Day. And we -- we're very clear about our views of the nature of the B2B distribution value chain, how that's evolving, the impact of digital, what's happening in terms of the customer end of our value chain, and those customers are looking at consolidating the supplier base, what's happening on the supplier end of our value chain where suppliers have been coming together, be it acquisitions and combinations over the last decade, and it was an imperative for distribution, that is still very highly fragmented, particularly in North America, both U.S. and Canada, to consolidate. And we consolidate at a faster rate.

And I foreshadowed that I expected that the bigs would come together, "the bigs." The bigger distributors in the core and the distribution portion of the value chain would come together. And I also said the imperative was that these will be -- give the opportunity for the bigs to have a transformational combination that does several things. You have greater scale with an enhanced footprint, geographic footprint, and a broader portfolio of supply chain services. That absolutely is the case with the WESCO-Anixter combination. And also, the combined platform would provide significant growth and cross-selling opportunities. That absolutely is the case for the WESCO-Anixter combination. And there'll be the opportunity to generate significant synergies in the first 3 years after combination. That absolutely is the case with the WESCO-Anixter combination.

And four, there's strong cash flows, both of these companies have been well-run distribution companies. The cash flows are very strong across all phases of the economic cycle. They're countercyclical when the economy slows down, and so their strong combined cash flows, the enhanced margins as a result of the combination and EPS accretion in the first full year of ownership is the compelling financial rationale.

Finally, most importantly, the combined business would be in a much better position to invest in digital capabilities and to take a leadership role in transforming their business in the context of a more digitized value chain in B2B distribution, like what exists in B2C, the value chains. And that evolution has occurred over the last few decades.

So very compelling set of rationale. I mean the short summary would be, in terms of growth, 1 plus 1 is going to be much greater than 2. Putting these 2 together in terms of cost, 1 plus 1 is less than 2. And then that increased margin allows us to deliver a significant portion to our investors in the form of accretion and also invest to a greater degree in the business to drive and lead the digital transformation. So that's the rationale of the deal.

Mario J. Cortellacci

Jefferies LLC, Research Division

Great. Appreciate it. And then just one follow-up, and I'll turn it over. Just curious to know, I guess, how you're thinking about structuring your sales force or the combined sales force once the deal is closed.

John J. Engel

Chairman, President & CEO

In terms of specific integration planning and those details, look, we're early in our integration planning, preparations and discussions. So look, we're very focused on getting through the activities between sign and close. And as we move forward in the process, we get the deal successfully closed, we'll have a dedicated integration team and be working aggressively to take the best of the best of both companies and drive what I said, the top line opportunities, the cost synergies. And through that process, we'll be very clear as we make decisions and integrate the 2 large leading distribution companies.

Robert Stephen Barger

KeyBanc Capital Markets Inc., Research Division

Got it. And I understand, Dave, the comment on how the secondary won't be influenced by stock price but more the timing of approvals. But just as you've gotten more to the planning process, is there any updated thought on the size of the planned secondary? And just in general, do you think that's a 1Q or a 2Q event when you go to market?

David S. Schulz

Senior VP & CFO

Yes, Steve. We haven't been able to define that size more definitively, yes. We talked about it being greater than $400 million in equity or equity-content securities that we would issue. We're still working through the timing. Obviously, a lot of that will be dependent upon when we receive regulatory approval as we've got to file the registration statement with the SEC. We're working through all of that. So that will obviously influence the timing of when we're out there marketing the equity.

Robert Douglas Barry

The Buckingham Research Group Incorporated

Got it. Got it. Just lastly for me, a quick one on the deal. This may also be a question you don't -- can't answer at the moment yet. But any thoughts initially on what your amortization might look like? And if it's significant, might it be warrant considering going to a cash EPS number?

---

David S. Schulz
Senior VP & CFO

Yes, Rob. That's one of the things that we're still working our way through is the valuation of the purchase price allocation to the intangibles and what impact that would have on amortization. Clearly, this is work that we were only really able to start after we had signed the agreement, so we're still relatively early in this. That is something that, right now, we don't have an answer. And that's also one of the key reasons why we're just not at that stage where we're able to provide you with that full accretion estimate. Once we nail that down, along with the capital structure, we'll be able to provide you with more details.

Operator

This concludes our question-and-answer session. I would like to turn the conference back over to John Engel for any closing remarks.

John J. Engel
Chairman, President & CEO

Yes. Thank you all for your time this morning. Brian and Will will be available to take your questions. And we look forward to seeing many of you at one of our investor marketing events that we will be participating in during the first quarter, including the Raymond James 2020 Institutional Investors Conference in early March. Have a great day.

Non-GAAP
